When Medicine Met Science Fiction* Film Night: Cloning in Popular Film
Presented by Cameo Cinema and The Museum of Health Care

Following the success of Celluloid & Starch: Nurses in the Movies, join us for our second-annual entertaining and thought-provoking evening of film clips and discussion. This year's program will explore the representation of cloning in popular film. Experts in the fields of genetics and ethics will be on hand for the discussion.

The screening will be held on March 4, 2010 at 7:00 pm at Room 1102, Biosciences Complex (116 Barrie St., Queen's University). Free admission. Free popcorn. All are welcome.

Before the screening, be sure to pay a visit to the Museum of Health Care (32 George St.) to explore our galleries, including our newly revamped When Medicine Met Science exhibition which highlights major developments in health care in the 1800s, including the discovery of germs and innovations in surgical tools and medicines. We will be offering special extended evening hours for one night only (March 4th gallery hours: 10am to 6:45pm).
